History & Culture

Kitimat is derived from Git-a-maat (Kitamaat), a Tsimshian description of the Haisla, which means “People of the Snow.” Prior to colonization, the Kitamaat band inhabited the traditional territory that Kitimat is now situated on.

HAISLA NATION

The Haisla, meaning “dwellers downriver,” have a rich culture and history and have occupied lands in Northwest BC for over 9,000 years.

Today about half of their 1,700 members live in Kitamaat Village (about 10 km from Kitimat). The modern day Haisla Nation is an amalgamation of two historic bands: the Kitamaat of the Douglas and Devastation channels and the Kitlope of the upper Princess Royal Channel and Gardner Canal.

Living and working on the land and water has always been fundamental to the Haisla way of life. They have lived off the land and water resources on their traditional territory for thousands of years, and are committed to the preservation of those resources for future generations.

The Haisla Nation Council has shown support for respectful, equitable, and sustainable development on their traditional territory. They have welcomed the LNG industry onto their territory by supporting LNG Canada, the proposed Kitimat LNG project, and through the development of their own proposed Cedar LNG project. Throughout the process of LNG speculation and development, the Haisla have remained committed to protecting the environment, preserving the area's natural assets, and expanding opportunities for their members.

DISTRICT OF KITIMAT

Kitimat was built in the 1950s on the traditional territory of the Haisla to support construction and operation of the new world-class Alcan aluminum smelter. Our community was designed by renowned city planner Clarence Stein to facilitate an environment that would attract and retain workers. Our history is steeped in multiculturalism as the developing community attracted workers from around the world.

Kitimat remains a welcoming and diverse place to reside as natural opportunities continue to inspire workers and families from across the globe to make Kitimat their home.

Over the years, other industries including forestry, pulp and paper, and methanol production have made Kitimat their home. In October 2018, the energy sector arrived when the decision was made by LNG Canada to develop a $40B LNG export facility in Kitimat.

The LNG Canada project is the single largest private sector investment in Canadian history. The investment is a case of history repeating itself, as Alcan's investment in the Kitimat aluminum smelter was the single largest private investment in Canada's history at the time.

Kitimat is surrounded by British Columbia's spectacular north coast mountains.
